

Eye

Invasives

A California Department of Fish and Wildlife Newsletter Volume 4, Number 1

Greetings!

Welcome to the Spring 2014 edition of Eye on Invasives, the California Department of Fish and Wildlife's newsletter dedicated to providing the public with new and important information about invasive species in California.

This issue of Eye on Invasives focuses on efforts by volunteers who are working to combat invasive species on a variety of fronts. In this issue you will find an article by Greg Pauly, Assistant Curator of Herpetology at the Natural History Museum of Los Angeles County, who writes about how citizen scientists are helping to document non-native reptiles in urban areas as well as articles about volunteer efforts at the Elkhorn Slough National Estuarine Research Reserve, along Cache Creek, and in California's state parks.

We hope you enjoy reading our latest issue, Invader Crusaders, and encourage you to share it with others who may be interested in learning about California's invasive species and their impacts. We also welcome suggestions on invasive species related topics for future editions, which may be submitted to Invasives@wildlife.ca.gov.

Sincerely,
Susan Ellis
Invasive Species Program Manager
California Department of Fish and Wildlife

If you were forwarded this email and would like to subscribe to the Eye on Invasives newsletter, click to "Join our Mailing List."

