San Joaquin Kit Fox

There was a time the San Joaquin Kit Fox roamed throughout the Central Valley. But as people moved into their habitat to live and work, Kit Fox numbers plummeted, and they became endangered. Kit Foxes have now moved into urban areas in the Central Valley, where a mange epidemic has further impacted them. We can all help Kit Foxes by not feeding them, being mindful while driving, storing nets used for sports and not using rodenticides where they are found. My name is Jaime Rudd, and I'm an Environmental Scientist with the California Department of Fish and Wildlife. Together, we can ensure Kit Foxes can have a future here in California.
