

The CDFW saltwater angling and diving record programs recognize exceptional saltwater finfish and shellfish taken in California by sport anglers and divers. The program has given CDFW biologists the opportunity to examine trophy-sized catches since the 1950s...

Procedures to Apply for a Record

1. Record the date and location of the catch.
2. Take several pictures of the catch. Three or four good shots are adequate so that the finfish or shellfish can be clearly identified.
3. Weigh the fish on a certified scale. A grocery store or a sport angling shop should be able to help you get an official weight. Keep the receipt and send it in with your application. Make sure to write down the scale's official certification number.
4. Get two witnesses to verify the weigh in. These should be people you do not know. We will need their contact information for verification of your record.
5. Have a trained marine biologist correctly identify the catch. You can do this at California Department of Fish and Wildlife (CDFW) field offices (see current regulations booklet for locations) or you can take the catch to a university or a museum where a trained biologist can verify the species of your catch.
6. Fill out the entire application and turn it in, following all instructions provided (this brochure does not include all instructions). The complete procedural form and application are available from your local CDFW office or on the CDFW website. Different rules apply to the angling and diving record programs. Applicants are responsible for following all rules and instructions. To request record application forms, contact:

Saltwater angling records are for all tackle types. State law presently prohibits the take of giant (black) sea bass, and bronzespotted, cowcod, and yelloweye rockfish off California (California Administrative Code Title 14, sections 28.10 and 28.55 [b]).

* The recreational red abalone fishery was closed for 2018.
