

Located along Hwy 166 between Santa Maria and Bakersfield, Sleepy Creek Ranch sits quietly in West Cuyama Valley in northern Santa Barbara County.

The 693 acres of Sleepy Creek Ranch are tucked along Cottonwood Canyon with the Caliente Mountains to the north and the Sierra Madre Range located to the south, in the Los Padres National Forest. The terrain offers miles of trails through oak savannahs, riparian habitat, juniper-sage woodlands, and chaparral. Approximately 250 acres of BLM land and the Los Padres National Forest are all accessible through Sleepy Creek Ranch if you need to expand your hunting range.

While Sleepy Creek offers hunting opportunities, it is also rich in California history. The 115-year-old homestead was built on top of a prehistoric Indian village and was also the last known home of Nancy Kelsey, the first American woman to cross the plains in a wagon train and enter California in 1843.

While no hotels are in the immediate vicinity (about an hour drive in either direction), Bates Canyon campground is the closest place to headquarter and is located in the Los Padres National Forest. If you really want a memorable hunting trip, Sleepy Creek Ranch also serves as a bed & breakfast. There are 3 rustic, newly-renovated rooms to stay in on the fully solar-powered ranch.

For more information on Sleepy Creek Ranch & accommodations please visit:

<http://www.sleepycreekranch.com>